To the medical students that's going to represent the future of healthcare:

First see if the company you work for is registered on the stock market. This tells you the mindset of the company. Either there for the dollar or human lives.

As a doctor they tell you what you can and can't do to help us — 'us' meaning prisoners. It's about cutting cost rather than saving lives. They tell you that you have stage 4 cancer instead of telling you in stage 1, 2, or 3. They wait until they can't save you or the last chance they have then they react. Or, they wait until the lawsuit forces them to act.

That doesn't mean the company hires bad people but, they put people in positions of power who're likely to serve the company's interest instead of the patient's interest.
